

POLICY ON CONFLICT OF INTEREST

A conflict of interest is understood to mean anything that interferes or may interfere with the full, proper and objective procedure for considering and making a decision on the publication of research articles or other materials.

A conflict of interest is considered to exist if the persons involved in the editorial process are in a relationship with each other, personal or otherwise, that could potentially compromise them or interfere with objectivity or influence the resolution of issues related to publication.

During the editorial process, the following relationships between the editor-in-chief and/or responsible editors, reviewers and authors constitute a conflict of interest:

- the author and the responsible editor and/or reviewer work at the same department or in the same research group, etc.;
- the author is a student, and the reviewer is a teacher or scientific supervisor;
- the author is a student, and the reviewer and/or editor is the student's supervisor.

At the time of submission, the author must disclose all potential conflicts of interest to the journal editors. Once manuscripts have been submitted for review, reviewers are asked to notify the editor of any conflicts that may arise.

The author designated by the co-authors as the corresponding author must declare any conflicts of interest on behalf of all authors.

Conflicts of interest may also arise from employment, funding sources, personal financial interests, membership in relevant organizations, or other circumstances that may bias the decision-making of the reviewers.

Reviewers should not review manuscripts in which they have a conflict of interest resulting from competitive, collaborative, or other relationships / affiliations with any authors, companies, or institutions associated with the manuscript.

Editors should not edit / manage manuscripts in which they have a conflict of interest resulting from competitive, joint or other relationships or connections with any of the authors, or companies or institutions associated with the research.

Any declarations of conflict of interest made by authors, reviewers or editors are reviewed by the responsible editor and/or editor-in-chief of the publication. In the case of substantiated declarations of a conflict of interest with the editor-in-chief of the publication, such declarations are reviewed by two members of the editorial board of the publication.
